

Collectors Guide to American Red Cross Pins

INTRODUCTION

Welcome to the world of American Red Cross Pin Collecting! Fascinating, often frustrating, collecting is always a fun experience.

Fascinating? Yes! Uncover the history of the Red Cross through its pins. When did they come out? What were they for? Who issued them? This Guide will help you identify what you beg, buy, or trade for.

Frustrating? You bet! Frustration arises when you start looking for specific pins or try to keep up with new ones being issued. It seems another pin turns up almost every week.

Fun? Of course! Finding a new or different pin can be exciting. Watching a collection grow and filling in the "blanks" can be rewarding. New friends made while trading pins can last a lifetime. And a collection on display is a source of pride and a great conversation starter.

Now down to basics.

TYPES OF PINS

There are four major types of "pins": lapel-style pins, medals (often on ribbon), campaign-style pins (referred to herein as buttons), and fold-over tabs.

Lapel pins have been the more formal pins through the years. They are generally (although not always) made of metal, with the earliest pins commonly bronze and occasionally silver or another base metal. When variety was needed, colored material (cloisonne, enamel) on a metal base allowed for greater distinction among pins. In later years, silkscreen and digital pictures were used, often under an epoxy dome.

During World War II there was a metal shortage. As a result, lapel pins were often made of plastic, fabric, and/or ribbon. Silver was often used as a base metal during this period since it was not needed for the war effort. Paper tags replace several "give-away" buttons.

Medals were often made of bronze and suspended on a ribbon for a top bar which had the "pin." They were often used as awards and as badges for convention delegates.

Campaign-style buttons, often referred to as "tinnies" first appeared during early membership campaigns and Junior Red Cross activities. Because they were less expensive to produce than lapel pins, buttons have generally been used for special promotions or where large quantities were to be given away. The earliest ones were celluloid while tin ones soon took over as the most common.

Fold-over tabs also came out during World War II mainly as an economic measure. They were even cheaper to produce than buttons and were used in the mass "give-away" promotions. Although not as common during current times, they still show up in Youth and Blood Services.

PIN MANUFACTURING

The most common modern method of lapel pin manufacturing uses a cast metal base with colors added. (Cloisonne, enamel, etc.) This process provides "outlines" of the base metal to help distinguish designs and create text. Generally, a gilt or silver-toned material is used as the base metal. Cloisonne without the "outlines" was introduced in the late 1980s. Another common method is to silkscreen the design on a metal base. Silkscreen and some enamel pins will often have an epoxy "overcoat" which help to protect the design. More modern times see digital pictures used in the pins, usually with the epoxy dome.

The earliest buttons were made of celluloid; however this material gave way to tin and other metals around 1920. Buttons and tabs have been made by imprinting the design on the metal. Another method for buttons is utilizing a design on paper which is placed of a metal backing and held on with a thin layer of clear plastic. Each button type then has a pin backing added to it. Digital pictures became popular in the 2000's.

It is interesting to note that the pin backings for buttons were hand inserted until the early 1940s when a machine was invented to do the chore. It was many years, however, before the machines were in common use.

WHAT'S IN THE BOOK

This section covers lapel pins, campaign-style buttons, and medals produced by National Headquarters, and separately by state or area, those pin and medals issued by chapters, blood centers, and stations. Campaign-style buttons are not included in the state/area listing.

The TEXT will include information on who, where, when and why...or as much information as I have been able to document.

The PICTURES are, for the most part, are actual scans or photos of the items. I have tried to keep colors accurate, but some colors don't scan well. (Gold, silver) For these I have indicated in the text what the color is. Where there are several pins of the same design but with color variations, I have scanned and adjusted them as a group, before dividing into their various "slots" in the book. Hopefully, this will allow the viewer to see the differences. Where I do not have access to the actual item, I have taken a scan from a photograph, utilized photos taken by other collectors, copied the manufacturer's artwork, or there is a line drawing with color notations. I have tried to indicate which pictures are from photographs.

ID CODES are assigned to each pin. They are in four parts: NM (state/region code)-XXXX (the issuing unit)-1996 (the year of issue)-01 (to distinguish multiple pins in a single year). In some cases, particularly blood donor pins, they were issued over several years.

If, however, the actual year of each is not known, they are all listed as the first year. Occasionally, a year is not known. They will be listed as "19xx" or "191x" if the decade is known.

HINTS FOR COLLECTORS

Get to know other collectors! We are each other's greatest source of new and old pins. No one person can keep up with all the new pins coming out or find all the older pins floating around. (I know, I've tried!) Be sure to "spread the word" when a new pin is produced and let people know what you have to trade. If there is a specific pin you are looking for, let it be known. Someone is bound to come up with an extra some day!

Keep track of your collection. Know what you have and take care of it. Don't just throw the pins in a box or drawer. If they can't be formally displayed, at least keep the pins from being lost or damaged.

Know where to look for pins. This is especially true if you are interested in the older, obsolete pins. Check your chapter's attic, basement and storerooms. Get to know antique and "collectibles" dealers in your area. Visit antique shows, flea markets and garage sales. If the price of pins is right, pick up extras for trading with other collectors.

When you trade, agree on what is being traded. Communicate with the other collector as to what you are sending, and what you expect to receive. DON'T SEND PINS BLINDLY!!!

When you mail pins. The Post Office is well known for "munching" pins sent through their machines. They recommend you use metered mail or take the envelope to a postal clerk and have it hand canceled then and there. Note also that "thick" envelopes are considered packages and postage is higher than standard.

Other suggestions include:

1. Don't put loose pins in an envelope. Wrap them securely or use a padded mailer or small box.
2. Mark the envelope "HAND CANCEL" in RED and remember the Post Office requires extra postage for special handling and "thick" envelopes.
3. Tracking is available on packages. Certainly on packages mailed at the post office. There are also tracking forms available for those not sent at a post office.

These suggestions will not guarantee safe arrival, but they improve the odds.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am grateful for the help of the many people who have contributed information, pins and drawings to this effort. I especially wish to thank the staff and volunteers of the American Red Cross Historical Resources Department who have shared information with me as they find it. The late Hazel Braugh was instrumental in helping me get the original project off the ground. Also, Thank You to all those people who send me pictures of what they've picked up as they travel!

Very special thanks go to my husband, Dana, for his patience, his suggestions, and his tolerance of a house "full of Red Cross!"

HAPPY COLLECTING!

Initial pins were made with both safety catches and double clutch backs. Light bronze pins were worn by men in Military and Naval Welfare Service (later Service to the Armed Forces). Black bronze pins were worn by women in Military and Naval Welfare Service and by volunteers in the Special Service Corps. Pins were worn on the lapel or collar. Silver-toned pins also found, probably from WWII metal shortage.

Cut-out Red Cross Pins, 1918+, 1941

NQ-GENL-1918-06 (small); -07 (larger, plain); 1941-01 (white edge)

Cut-out Red Crosses have been used in a variety of ways over the years. Originally intended for Red Cross workers wearing Army uniforms, they were also used on uniform caps and collar tabs, at the neck of blouses, and on epaulets of coats and uniforms.

Although the size has varied little since 1918, the curvature of the pin face as well as the width of the white and/or gilt edging can vary. This is probably caused by new dies being cast on reorders.

Chapter Pin, 1918

NQ-GENL-1918-08

For women executives, this pin could be worn at the base of the shoulder strap of the uniform tunic.

These pins (except Administration) were redesigned because they did not meet the specifications in the Geneva and Hague Conventions--a red cross on a plain white background. Although they were redesigned, the old pins already on hand were used before orders were filled with the new pins. In 1949, it was decided to destroy the stock of old pins, except Motor Corps of which a large quantity was still available.
